

New York, 23 June, 1862.

Dear Garrison,

83

McKim arrived from South Carolina this morning, crammed with more important facts respecting Slavery than any man has yet revealed. If you could hear him talk ten minutes, you would say, as I do, that he ought to be at Frammingham on the 4th, without fail. And I believe that an invitation, sent at once by telegraph, with promise to pay expenses, would secure his <sup>attendance</sup> ~~attendance~~. He spent his time in South Carolina to good purpose, his investigations covering a wide field and embracing points of great moment and thrilling interest. He would stir the hearts of any audience by what he has to offer.

Of course, I don't know what arrangements you have made, but surely there would be room and time for him on the occasion. There is no time to lose, if you would have him.

Yours, J. W. Johnson.
